Unfortunately, AndroGel requires a prescription, meaning some athletes might need an equally effective alternative. When it comes to building lean muscle mass and giving your sexual performance a major.

AndroGel is a testosterone gel commonly prescribed to boost testosterone levels in men. Unlike other synthetic drugs often ingested or administered intravenously, AndroGel is applied directly to the skin, soaking into the muscles and bloodstream. Using the product in gel or patch form to gain muscle mass for bodybuilding purposes is possible.

Increased muscle mass is a male secondary sex characteristic brought about by high testosterone levels. According to the Cleveland Clinic, low testosterone can cause a decrease in muscle mass. Correcting testosterone deficiency will restore muscle mass to normal levels. Testosterone and related steroid hormones are used to increase muscle mass in athletes, but severe side effects are. 3. Testosterone injections result in higher levels of free testosterone and total testosterone. This makes sense when you think about it. Testosterone gel and patches are transdermal delivery methods. This means the testosterone has to cross through your skin, fat, muscle, and blood vessels before it gets into your system.

125 mg per week was found to make significant muscle gains in young men. Responses of different doses of testosterone injections on body composition, strength, etc. Testosterone Injections Increase Muscle and Strength Better than T gels.

AndroGel is a transdermal gel which contains 1% testosterone by weight which is designed to provide continuous delivery of testosterone to the body over a 24 hour period after being applied. It was approved by the FDA as a prescription medication in 2000 and is prescribed to males who suffer from deficiency or absence of endogenous testosterone. 125 Mg Per Week Might Be Ideal for Increased Muscle Mass. Some studies show that the "ideal" testosterone dosage might be somewhere around 125 mg per week, taken either as injections or gels. The study analyzed the performance of 61 men aged between 18 and 35 years. Study participants received testosterone in different doses such as 50mg.

Part of increasing testosterone to build muscle mass deals with recovery. Your body releases testosterone while you're sleeping. Studies even show that when you're sleep-deprived, testosterone levels can be decreased by at least 15%. Make sure you're getting enough sleep each night. When I was bulking up in my 20s, I would also take a 30.
